7. Description

This 8.4 mile section of state-maintained Route 66, now designated as SR 118, serves local residents. It follows the upper contours of the Rio Puerco of the West floodplain, crossing the AT&SF tracks three miles east of Manuelito and then paralleling them to the Arizona border. Yellow and red sandstone cliffs often covered by juniper and pinon trees line the river valley with their walls rising abruptly. Since the valley floor is unstable and susceptible to flooding, both the railroad and road cling to the slopes just beneath the mesas as they pass through narrow portions of the valley. Here large and often unstable cuts result in brief rises above the 6,200 ft. high valley floor, affording motorists spectacular vistas of the sandstone cliffs lining the valley. Two large slope cuts, five concrete box culverts and the historic cross template of the road convey a strong feeling of early motor travel in western New Mexico.

The road section begins at the west end of a reinforced concrete grade separation. West of Manuelito the road climbs above the railroad to make its way around the lower slopes of two mesas including Devil's Cliff. Both cliffs have substantial slope cuts, conveying a feeling of the challenges facing early road builders. Chronic problems with land and rock slides at Devil's Cliff have resulted in the installation of steel mesh fencing along the escarpment. As the road descends the slope at Devil's Cliff, it stretches west to the Arizona border, passing through a narrow portion of the valley lined by red sandstone cliffs.

8. Statement of Significance

Realigned and paved in 1930, as a part of FAP 76, this road section was one of the first rural portions of Route 66 to be paved. With trading posts and other evidences of the nearby Navajo Nation lining the road, it had a close association with the "Indian Country" image that drew many motorists to the Southwest. This section of state-maintained Route 66 is significant as a reminder of the rise of automobile tourism in New Mexico and thus is eligible under Criterion A.

Verbal Boundary Description

This property is 8.4 miles long. The east end lies at the west end of the Manuelito grade separation, and the west end lies at the Arizona border. The sides are defined by a corridor extending fifty feet on either side of the road's centerline, marking a right of way of 100 feet, a minimum width used by the State Highway Department during the 1930s.

Boundary Justification

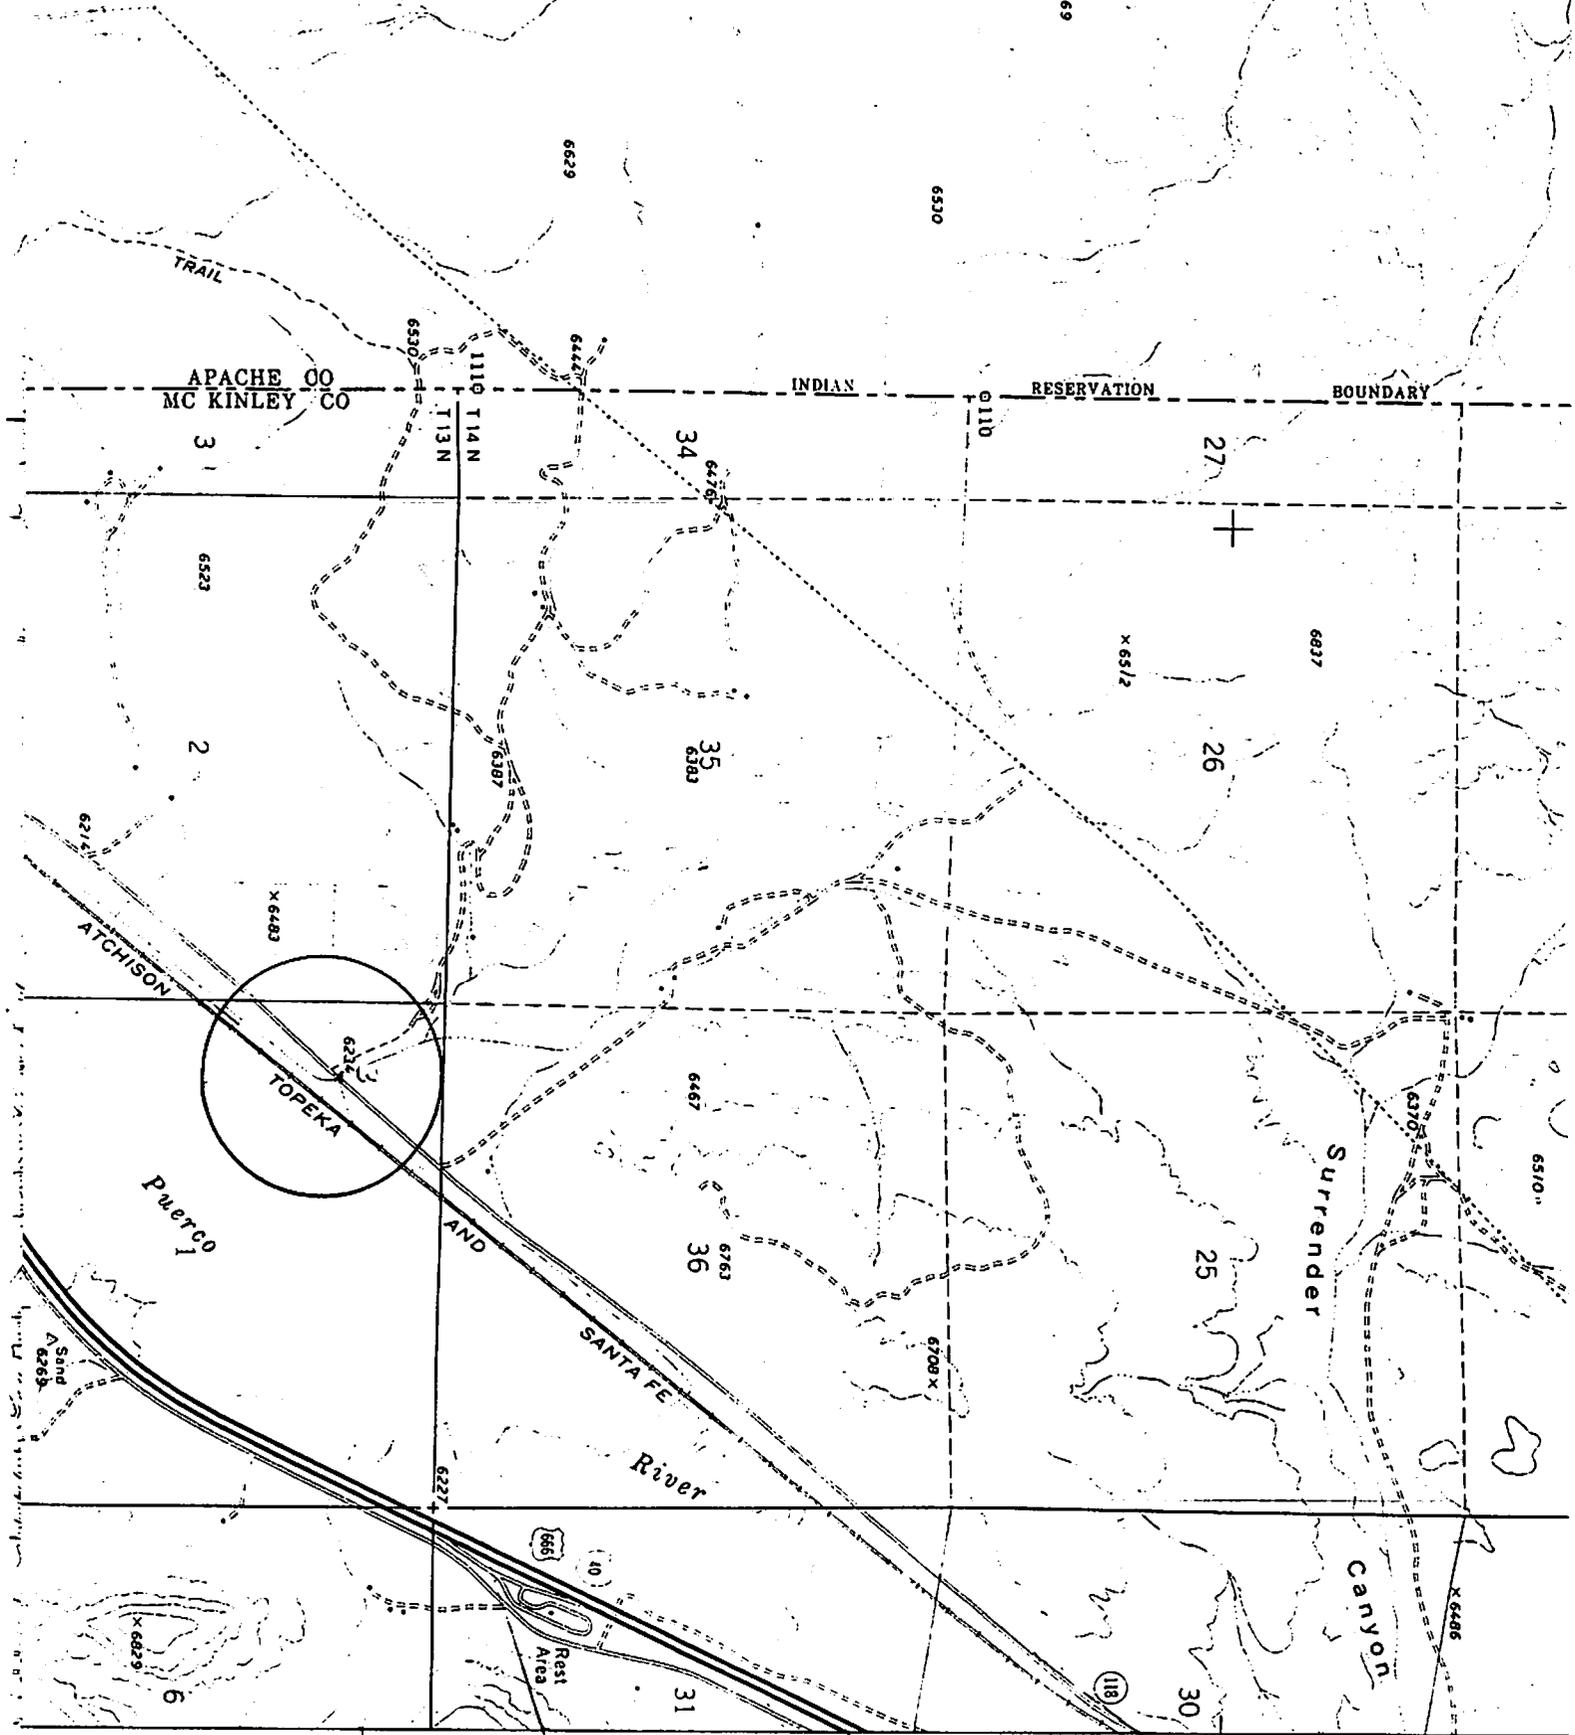

The boundary includes the entire parcel historically associated with this section of Route 66.
